Compared to the last report demand remains good, prices remained steady, trade activity remains slow. Drought continues to be the main topic on everyone's mind these days, especially for those in central and southwest Kansas. Winter wheat did not come up across much of that area and significant precipitation is needed over the next few weeks. Drought is also impacting groundwater levels across south central and western Kansas. According to the National Integrated Drought Information System (NIDIS), the groundwater level fell by nearly three feet near Garden City, Liberal, and Ulysses in January alone. And if that weren't enough bad news, a state declaration of disaster was issued by the governor last week due to high wildland fire danger. On a positive note, drought has improved across northeastern Kansas. According to the U.S. Drought Monitor for March 28th, the categorical percent area for drought conditions remained the same. Abnormally dry conditions (D0) remained near 9%, moderate drought (D1) remained near 9.5%, severe drought (D2) remained near 13%, extreme drought (D3) remained near 16%, and exceptional drought (D4) remained near 36%.
